On Offense: One of the most dynamic scorers in Division II basketball. Hommes possesses a lightning quick jumper with a high release point that he has no issues utilizing off a dribble. Is in the 99th percentile of Division II players in catch-and-shoot situations. A solid athlete who loves to leak out in transition and finish at the rim with vigor. Has flashed a step-back jumper along with several dribble counters over the season. The most impressive thing about Hommes on offense is that he never stops moving off the ball. Terrific cutter who is constantly thinking about angles and how to get himself open going towards the rim. Tremendous gravity at a shooter. Questions about his explosiveness when slashing at the next level. Tough to tell how high his ceiling is aside from being a shooter right now. Capable passer who isn't selfish but lacks creativity and a ton of dynamic ability setting up others. Hommes will have to learn how to constantly threaten better athletes off the dribble despite possessing an average handle and position average athleticism.

On Defense: Positionally solid defender who rarely gets beat from laziness. Does a good job fighting through screens and staying aware of personnel tendencies off the ball. May struggle containing NBA level wings in isolation situations with medial lateral quickness at best. Hommes doesn't create a ton of turnovers or block many shots but isn't afraid to challenge athletes at the rim. Some the lackluster steal rate was a result of scheme and energy conservation for offense. Has the length and size to switch onto bigger forwards for possessions.

Professional Role: Scoring Wing

Hommes is a lanky wing with effortless range who has slowly added something to his offensive repertoire in each of his collegiate seasons. In an era of the NBA that is predicated on spacing and efficiency Hommes looks like a textbook complimentary player that makes life easier for any slasher or ball dominant scorer in the starting or second unit of a team. His IQ as a cutter only heightens his value with shot creating teammates.

Optimal Play Style

Daulton Hommes will be at his best in a system that pairs him with a dynamic slasher and other wings with the athleticism to guard quicker forwards on the perimeter. His ability to play without the ball and move in transition should allow him to open the floor regardless of what tempo the game is being played at.

Off the Court

I've heard from numerous teammates that Hommes is a great locker room presence who was genuinely fun to play with. Battled back from two severe knee injuries in high school and shows toughness, perseverance, and poise even when things haven't gone his way.

Summary

A tall wing that's lethal from range and never stops moving. Hommes does an assortment of great things on offense while providing effort on the other end.
