On Offense: High level scorer with his back to the basket. Displays a great right-handed hook shot with some crafty counters. Capable finishing with his left but needs to go to it more. Rarely ever attempts a jump-shot. Has shown no interested in extending his range which could become an issue with his lack of length. Has some of the best hands in DII basketball catching nearly everything thrown towards him. Also is effective outworking and rebounding around larger players on the offensive glass. Really good cutter knows how to get himself open for easy shots. Doesn't need a play called for him to impact the game positively.

On Defense: Does a great job on guards and wings off switches with is quick feet and above average defensive IQ. Doesn't block a ton of shots or generate steals at a high rate. Longer post players tend to just shoot over him when the post position is good. Rarely comes across opposing players that overwhelm him with strength on the block. Always plays with a high motor.

Professional Role: Scoring Rebounder

Despite lacking great length to impact opposing teams, Satterthwaite is always playing smart and efficient basketball. He's a capable post passer and will always be a threat to score in 1 on 1 situations down low. On top of this he does a great job boxing out and will happy to do a lot of the dirty work in the paint that most players avoid.

Optimal Play Style

Satterthwaite could be a unique roll partner for a creative guard if surrounded by shooters. He won't space the floor but sets a great screen and is hard to contain without fouling when he rumbles down the lane with the ball. He's not explosive but has a quick jump and has enough skill to find a niche at many different tempos.

Off the Court

Something important to note with Satterthwaite is that he happily accepted a lesser role in the Point Loma offense this season in order to accommodate NBA prospect Daulton Hommes. Selfless guy who has some cool interests outside of basketball and is easy to be straightforward with.

Summary

Undersized post with deceptive quickness and great hands. Lack of range is a concern but he's a scrappy and smart player who is going to do the little things.
